Growing Prosperity.

An evidence of the growing ordinarily before Christmas was an especial red letter day in the history of the town. The skies were brightly unlit overhead, the spirit of the times was abroad in the land, the people from the country rushed in by the hundreds, and by 10 o'clock Marion was a seething mass of humanity all with full pocket-books and eager to spend it. The Press is informed by several of our leading merchants that on that day more goods were old in Africa than on any day in its history; and nine-tenths of the sales were on a cash basis. This peaks well for the agricultural and mineral resources of old Crittenden county.

Went Out in a Canoe

One of the most important measures to come before the General Assembly of Kentucky is the establishment of a State Normal School. The need for such an institution is self-evident. The multiplicity of a large number of our common school teachers is an evil which cries loudly for remedy. But in the present condition of the state finances the Press doubts that anything in this direction will be done at the present session.

Judge Aaron Towery leaves the office of County Judge with the confidence of the people. He was complimented when not twenty-one years of age with the office of school trustee, and for twenty years was county surveyor and then county judge, always giving satisfaction and dealing out justice in an even-handed way.

Hon. O. M. James is in Frankfort as a looker-on at the fracas. He is said to have declared his preference for Lawrence, of Trigg, as Speaker of the House.

Mr. H. H. Loving has been granted a new trial by the McCracken circuit court and his friends are hopeful of his final acquittal.

Is not the fine Italian band of O. M. J. noticeable in the late fight for the Speakership at Frankfort?

Chronic Constipation Cured.

One who suffers from chronic constipation is in danger of many serious ailments. Orino Laxative Fruit Syrup cures chronic constipation as it aids digestion and stimulates the liver and bowels, restoring the natural action of these organs. Commence taking it to-day and you will feel better at once. Orino Laxative Fruit Syrup does not nauseate or gripe and is very pleasant to take. Refuse substitutes. Woods & Orme.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Kentucky seems to be fairly well-keeping to the importance of settling immigration to her shores, and a step in the right direction has been taken by Capt. W. J. Stone, chairman of the executive committee of the state development convention, in his recent appointment of a committee of representative citizens from over the state to urge upon the Governor that he place the matter before the next legislature and request them to pass a law creating a Bureau of Immigration and Information, to be attached to the department of agriculture, labor and statistics. The crying need for such a bureau are too self-evident for discussion. With her hundreds of thousands of acres of undeveloped forests, clothed with gigantic timber and teeming underneath with untold millions of mineral wealth, with the finest agricultural soil in the world capable of supporting a population ten times greater than she has, with all these advantages, Kentucky barely holds her own, if that, in the mad race for empire and prosperity. Witness our own county. Agents from other state bureaus come into our county and whisk our very best citizens from under our noses to the wilds of the trackless west; and this exodus has finally reached such proportions as to become alarming. And doubtless like conditions prevail in other counties. Kentucky is not a dead state; only in a state of innocuous desuetude. She has the resources of a giant, but she needs population to develop them. And the only way to get that population is to let the outside world know what an enviable future awaits them within our borders. This is an age of progress and push, and the laggard is going to be kicked from the ranks—every time.

Mad Dog Scare.
There has been a great deal of excitement in the Crayneville neighborhood in the last few weeks on account of hydrophobia. A mad dog was through the country about Dec. 12, bitting several dogs and some stock.
It bit three dogs at Win. Woodall's, a dog and a cow belonging to Rev. J. M.
Roberts and a sow belonging to Geo.
Sullenger, who finally killed it. The dog of Mr. Stallion's, which was also bit, died. Rev. Roberts' cow showed symptoms of hydrophobia on Dec. 30, and by night was perfectly wild. The other stock was separated from her and she tore down a heavy rail fence to get to them. She was then turned into the yard with a heavy paling fence between. Several panels of the fence were covered with blood where she had tried to tear them down.
She fought wildly at every thing and about four o'clock Sunday morning killed herself fighting at a jackory rump. The people of the neighborhood were warned to be on their guard for a rabid dog or stray

Early Days on the O. V. Ry.
Capt. W. T. Columbus ran the first passenger train on the Ohio Valley road in fact had charge as conductor of a combined train before the road was completed to Sturgis. His life during the early days of this road was anything but pleasant or safe from danger. The people living along the road were ignorant, to a great extent, of what a railroad really was and were disposed to do it all the damage possible. As a case in point the late Sam Thurman once told a Press reporter that one night he and several other young men from the Repton neighborhood piled a lot of heavy cross-ties in the cow-gap on the road, where it crosses the Flynn Ferry road just below Repton. The young men then hid and waited to see her jolly off the rails, as Sam expressed it. Fortunately the engineer was looking for trouble and was running slow. The obstruction was discovered and removed and the train went on its way, followed by a fusillade of bullets from the young men's revolvers. Now, there was no malice in this action, they took no thought of endangering human life it was simply a mad, thoughtless prank to see her jolly off the rails. This and many other narrow escapes awaited Capt. Columbus' train in those early days of the road. But the Captain has risen as the road has advanced, and now has charge of one of the fastest and most handsomely equipped passenger trains that runs out of Chicago on the Illinois Central's fast

Notice!
To the taxpayers of Crittenden county who owe tax
You are aware of the fact that my term as sheriff has expired. You may not know that I am going to close out the business connected with my administration of said office in 90 days, but I do know it. If my time is worth anything whatever to me you have no legal or moral right to take it out to cause me to waste one moment of it. So I shall expect every taxpayer in this county who has not paid his tax for 1902, 1903, 1904 or 1905 or any one of these years, to call and settle and that immediately. You may have been returned delinquent. The county is still looking after you and I am ordered to collect the delinquents as well as the rest, and I may be able to find some property now that I could not find before or that my deputies could not find.
All real estate on which the tax is not paid by March 15th, 1906 will be advertised, and I propose not later than March 15th, 1906 to levy on every person who owes any tax for any of these years, whether he owns any real estate or not, if he owns any property that will sell for cash. The law also gives me the right to garnish the wages of any one who owes any tax.
Now if you are disposed to treat me right in this matter all will be well, and I believe that you will treat me that way. Don't think for a mo-for it is not. I am compelled to ac-is a waste of time to me. So pay up

TING BULL'S PIPE

Interesting Relic of the Fighting Old Sioux Warrior Comes to Light.

Neenah, Wash., Dec. 29. Pierre, chief of the Coner d'Alone Indians, received one day last a tobacco pipe or calumet, that, somewhat of a curiosity, and an interesting relic of the days when the tribes were still struggling for supremacy on the East side of the Rocky Mountains.

The pipe, which was incased in a homely, ornate, carved box, made of pipe stone, a calcareous found in portions of the West, bowl, which is four inches in diameter, fits into an aperture in the box, which is of the same material, and is twenty inches long. It is of the short mouthpiece. It has square sides and has been hollowed out from end to end with a fine, or other small instrument. Though this aperture is inserted in a wooden tube, connecting the bowl with the mouthpiece at the other end. The weight of the stem and bowl approximates four pounds, thus a fine pretty ornamentation of the heads and some crude attempt at carving.

Chief of the Blackfoot tribe, whose English name is Peter, came to Montana to present this pipe to a friend, Chief Wildhorse, a DeSmet on the Coner d'Alone reservation.

According to Peter's story, which he told a few days ago to a correspondent on the way between Wallace and Teton, the Bull was its original owner. The warrior had it in his possession for many years previous to his death. Its fragrant exhalations were more than once the symbol of peace, and a conflict with soldiers of the United States or with some hostile tribe.

The Bull was killed in a skirmish with regular troops at the Pine agency, South Dakota, in December, 1890. An under-sub-chief, whose name was not learned, then assumed command of the tribe and possession of the warlike accoutrements and other effects of war, including his predecessor. The elements of war were buried with the old chieftain but the pipe, the symbol of peace, was retained as a relic of the dead.

It was passed on to a descendant, and a few days ago, the owner of the relic had been called to his death, leaving the cabinet to other hands.

About this time Peter, the Flathead, appeared among the Sioux and seeing the cabinet and hearing its history, succeeded in getting it by exchanging two of his best horses. After a short visit with his friends he returned to his own reservation, and then started on his mission of friendship to the Coner d'Alone, bearing the emblem of peace to the latter's chief.

On the train of which Chief Peter was a passenger, hearing the story, was impressed with the business and offered money for the pipe, but was given in exchange a refusal.

He then gave it to William Coner d'Alone Chief, and no inducement could shake his determination.

At the next day, and prizes the gift highly, for no less than for its intrinsic value.

Fate of the Tough Boy.

A boy stands on the street corner, smoking cigarettes, using slang, becoming an adept in the finesse of politeness, and making remarks about all the women that go by, and telling exactly where old Tom Smith misses it in the management of his business affairs. He does on the appellations of "June sweetie," "tough," and "peachey" applied to him, then he goes to the community. His conduct, says the Nebraska City Times, is commended at by the wits of the town, on the road to God knows where he is, while the younger prodigals look upon his reputation as a consummation devoutly to be wished. After a little there is an opening in the firm of Stoddard & Stoddard, for a promising boy, offering a good salary to start on. But our young peaches, who doesn't get it, and he can't understand why he, of all the young men round about, should not have been approached with that proposition at least three days before any one else was thought of. Miserable, incorrigible fool! Poor, wretched, wayward, mercurial, with distorted conceptions of life! What hath a business house to do with these? Boys, business men of a town know you better than your own parents do. Their eyes are on you when you are least aware. You may slip away from your old mother, who sits busy with her needle or her knitting, you may dope and deceive your best friends, you may elude the watchful eye of your teacher, you may trifle with the conscience of your Sunday School superintendent, but you can't fool the business men of your town, when they have a position of any trust to be filled.

Bent Her Double.

"I knew no one, for four weeks, when I was sick with typhoid and kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Annie Hunter, of Pittsburg, Pa., "and when I got better, although I had one of the best doctors I could get, I was bent double, and had to rest my hands on my knees when I walked. From this terrible affliction I was rescued by Electric Bitters, which restored my health and strength, and now I can walk as straight as ever. They are simply wonderful. Guaranteed to cure stomach, liver and kidney disorders, at Woods & Orme's drug store, price 50c.

Hoofs of Colts And Mares

Breeders who intend to exhibit colts and brood mares at the shows this fall should be remembering that it takes a long time to grow out a badly chipped and broken hoof, says Breeder's Gazette. We are just now in the period of the year when the pestilential flies devour the stock that runs in the fields, and especially in a season of plentiful rainfall it does not take long to smash the hoofs up in bad shape. Then it is not possible to get them in shape again before it is time to load for the journey to the fairs.

It is extraordinary that so many breeders seem to fail to understand what a great handicap a stubbed hoof means under in the show ring. Annually we see him with little or no hoofs at all. It costs only a little to keep colts shod for these few weeks now, and it will pay many times over. Then there is the additional matter that if a colt is worth showing at all he is worth showing in the very best advantage, and that means that he must have special care.

It would hardly do to run a big bunch of shod colts and brood mares in the field together, for they might injure one another, but colts are bred to ever go right ready for the shows, run in bands on the grass. In the hot weather they should be shod in the daytime and let out at night either singly or in pairs. The foot is the first thing the judge looks at in the show ring when it comes to judging horses, and surely for that reason, if not for personal pride and pride, breeders should see to it that their animals do not go stubbed into the arena.

Hay Saving Manager.

A great many horses acquire the wasteful habit of throwing out hay or other fodder on the stable floor, says an Arkansas farmer in Farm Progress. This is done in order to secure the horse hives and other choice portions which settle or accumulate in the bottom of the manger.

MANGER IN PLACE.

The habit is a bad one and a large part of the coarse fodder is made null for use by being trampled under foot. Much of it gets out of reach and is entirely lost, especially if the animals are tied short, as they usually are, when placed in a stall.

This waste can be prevented by use of the simple arrangement shown in the accompanying illustration. The two strips, c, are made from 1x3 hard wood and are hinged to the back of the manger. These two strips are connected at the outer end by a strip of hard wood, b. This arrangement is raised when the hay is being put in the manger, is then lowered and fastened down by means of a tongue or hook and remains there until the next feeding time. With it there is no danger of any hay being wasted.

The Hog For the Farmer.

The farmer, as a rule, does not care whether his hog wears red, white or black hair or whether his ears stick up or hang down. What he wants is a hog with a constitution, and any system of breeding that enfeebles the constitution is the kind of breeding he does not want in his herd. He wants his hog to be as immune from disease as possible, and to obtain this he must have the constitution-pigs that will fight for the best part before they are three hours old and that will even steal if given half a chance. The farmer's hog must be a hustler, a greedy fellow, healthy, vigorous and growthy and as good a looking as is possible to obtain without losing any of the before named important qualities.

Agricultural experiment stations have proved beyond any doubt that no man can afford to raise scrub hogs. Do not understand me to infer that you cannot make money handling scrub stock. What I do mean is that if you are making money handling such you can with the same amount of care and labor make much more by handling pure breeds or even high grades.—W. W. Jones Before Kansas Institute.

A Word For the Male.

From repeated experiments that have come under my observation in the past twenty-five years I have found that three males fifteen hands high that were constantly worked consumed about as much forage as two ordinary sized horses worked in the same way, and while the males were fat the horses were only in good working order, writes J. F. Cook in Farm and Ranch. Although a male will live and work on a very low fare, he also responds as quickly as any animal to good feed and kind treatment. True, it is charged that the male is vicious, stubborn and slow, but an experience in handling mules on the farm has failed to sustain the charge save in few instances, and in these propensities were brought about by bad handling. They are truer pullers than the horse and move more quickly under the load. Their hearing and vision are better than the horse.

A HUNTING PARTY

(Origin 2.)

After father's death mother and I lived alone together. It was pretty hard for mother, with no man in the house, and I was only a girl of sixteen. We did all the housework ourselves, which wasn't much, and as much of the farm work as we were able to do.

Mother never kept any money in bank. In the first place, there was no bank nearer than ten miles, and, in the second, she wouldn't have known how to keep a bank account.

One day, one of our horses having died, mother went to town to buy another. At the time our farm hand was at work for us, a man we had engaged a few days before. Mother had been gone but about half an hour when he came into the house and told me she had asked him to keep a sharp look out for me, as I was only a girl, alone, and without protection. He was so kind spoken that at first I believed him. This emboldened him to say that there were tramps lurking about and I would do well to put my money there might be in the house in a safe place. Then I began to suspect that he said this to find out whether there was any money in the house, so I told him that all the money had been paid out except what mother had taken with her to pay for the horse she intended to buy. Then he threw off all pretense and ransacked the house. Not finding what he was after, he came into the kitchen, where I was washing dishes, and, taking up a knife, threatened to kill me if I didn't tell where the money was kept.

Our sex are always dreading such trials as I was passing through, but when they come we surprise ourselves by standing up under them with unexpected coolness. I couldn't see how it was his interest to kill me, since the secret of his would die with me. I kept my mind bent on the problem of how to outwit him, but to outwit a man in a farmhouse, with no telephone or telegraph or any one within calling distance, is not an easy matter, and I made no headway.

The only thing I could do was to tell him that there wasn't any money in the house, or, if there was, that I didn't know where it was kept. I recommended him to look in different places, the cellar, the cupboard and the upstairs closets. He ransacked every place I suggested, but found nothing.

He was not likely to find the place where the money was hidden. Our house was very old and had been built with an old fashioned big fireplace in the kitchen. Up the chimney, which was large enough to admit a human body, mother had taken out a brick and broken off half of it. This left room for my money she had hidden the brick. When it was put back in its place it looked like the other bricks.

Well, at last the man grew so fierce that I was afraid he might murder me, and I told him where the money was. He at once stood in the chimney and began to hunt. I told him the money was higher, and he pulled the kitchen table on to the hearth. In his search he supported himself by bracing his knees and back. I shoved the table farther in, so that it covered the mouth of the chimney. Then for the first time it occurred to me that I had him in a trap. There was a heavy cupboard in the kitchen, and I moved it against the table. Just then I heard an exclamation of delight and knew he had found the money.

His next move was to order me to take away the table, but I had another matter to attend to. Knowing that when he found he couldn't come down he would go up, I ran to mother's bedroom, where since father's death she had kept his rifle, loaded, standing at the head of her bed, and, seizing it, ran outside and was just in time to take aim at the man's head, which was above the top of the chimney.

I shall never forget the expression of his face when he saw me, a mere child of a girl, pointing a rifle at him, cocked and ready to fire. He knew enough of country girls to understand that most of them could shoot pretty straight and that if I chose I could put a bullet through his head.

"See here, little girl, you've caught me fair. Now if you'll let me out of this I'll go about my business."

I didn't like the probability of having to watch him all day, and if I could have trusted him I would have let him go. As it was, I told him to get below the top of the chimney or I would shoot him. He offered to throw down the money if I would let him off, but I refused to do so. I made him believe that I would carry out my threat, and he disappeared down the chimney. He called to me that he would burn the money, but even this didn't move me.

Well, all this happened in the early morning, and till 10 o'clock I felt obliged to keep on a straddle lest he outwit me and get the upper hand again. Then when all was quiet I heard the sound of horses' hoofs and a gentleman in a red coat came riding up to the house.

"Did you see a hunting party go by here?" he asked.

"Haven't had time to notice. I've got a hunting party of my own."

He looked surprised and then for the first time noticed my gun. I told him my story, and when he learned that I had a man cornered in the chimney he burst into a laugh. I, relieved from the terrible strain I had been enduring, burst into tears.

Then the gentleman took my rifle and stood guard, while I took his horse and rode away for assistance. The game I had bagged alive was kept after that in the penitentiary.

Wrangling Among Union Miners.

Owensboro Inquirer: The investigation by the union of district No. 23, of the United Mine Workers, relating to the charges preferred against the officers of the district for misappropriating funds is assuming a serious aspect. The called meeting has been in session for three days now, and just how long it will take the delegates to wind up their business depends altogether on the report of the investigating committee. The meetings are being held behind closed doors. The contentions that are going on are of the most violent description. The delegates as a whole heard the reports and answers of the officers to the charges. Tuesday and part of yesterday morning. After a short session yesterday morning the delegates adjourned to allow the use of the hall to the investigating committee, that they might take their depositions and carry on their investigations. This investigating committee was completed Tuesday afternoon, part of which was completed Monday afternoon. There was some trouble Monday afternoon appointing a committee satisfactory to both factions, but the one that was named is satisfactory to all concerned.

The national board members who are present are holding the high hand in the meeting and determined to see that all sides get justice. Immediately after the investigating committee make their report the matter of assisting the union miners in Union county will be brought up and discussed, and a decision made. The question will also be settled as to whether the non-union miners who took the places of the union miners shall be let into the union at the regular fee of $10 for the practical miner, or whether they shall be charged the fee of the non-union miner, $25. This is perhaps the most important feature of the meeting, and the time of adjournment depends altogether on the time that the question can be disposed of.

Thousand Dollars Worth of Good.

A. H. Thurnes, a well known coal operator of Buffalo, O., writes: "I have been afflicted with kidney and bladder trouble for years, passing gravel and stones with excruciating pain. I got no relief from medicine until I began taking Foley's Kidney Cure, then the result was surprising. A few doses started the brick dust like fine stones and now I have no pain across my kidneys and I feel like a new man. It has done me $1,000 worth of good. Woods & Orme.

The Grip.

"Before we can sympathize with others, we must have suffered ourselves." No one can realize the suffering attendant upon an attack of the grip, unless he has the actual experience. There is probably no disease that causes so much physical and mental agony or which so successfully defies medical aid. All danger from the grip, however, may be avoided by the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy, not one case has ever been reported that has resulted in pneumonia or that has not recovered. Pay Day Was Fatal.

Wilksharr, Pa., Dec. 30.—Martin Althart and John Salkis, both of Port Griffith, a mining town near here, were murdered and robbed some time Saturday night. The crimes were separate and independent of each other.

Althart's body was found in the street a few minutes after he was killed. The body of Salkis was not discovered until this afternoon, some distance from the roadway, through a trail of blood leading from the road to the spot.

The two men received their pay yesterday and had been drinking. It was after midnight when Althart started homeward. Later two shots were heard close to the house and a neighbor jumping from bed, saw two men bending over his body in the roadway. Before an alarm could be given they had fled.

Salkis, with $22.50 in his pocket was last seen going homeward about midnight. He had evidently fought hard for his life. He was shot twice stabbed several times, and his head was battered with a club and hammer. Clutched tightly in his dead hand and covered with blood was a two dollar bill.

One man, arrested on suspicion, had money and a revolver in his pocket.
